J. T. HINTON,

A SKETCH.

A builder's yard, a ship upon the ways. The groan of straining planks, the snap of stays. The cheering of a crowd: "She's moving! She's off!" And with a sudden rush and splash the great ship leaves the wharf.

A storm swept, foam tossed sea, a howling gale. A ship half lost in foam, a rag of sail. The tolling of a bell, now low, now clear—"The shore! The shore!" She strikes in crashing waves to disappear.

A summer's eve, a calm and wailing tide. A dim stretch of sand that tries to hide. The bones of some great vessel, grown on high. Outlined against the sunset's last faint glow. Ah! what the story!—

QUEEN ELIZABETH'S FAULTS

She Was Very Vain and Inordinately Fond of Fine Dress.

Yet Elizabeth was never really successful with her wardrobe as a more feminine woman might have been. Her dresses were never beautiful, only ludicrously and most inappropriately magnificent—laden with jewels, weighted down with cloth of gold, stiff with silver embroidery and so heavy that even her big, powerful frame must without supporting vanities have felt the fatigue of carrying them about. Elizabeth was certainly vain, but she cannot claim femininity merely on that account, for vanity is by no means an exclusively feminine characteristic. There are perhaps more vain women than vain men because women have more leisure and their costumes afford greater opportunities for vanity than the strangely hideous clothing which custom has arranged for men, but no thoughtful (female) observer can doubt that a vain man is vainer than a vain woman.

Elizabeth's hands were her especial pride, and, judging from her portraits, they were certainly beautiful. They were laden with jewels, and it was her habit in public to pull her rings off with absent-mindedness and push them on again, moving those white hands about in the most obvious way. Once, during the grave consideration of a state paper, wherein her cold sagacity never took second place, she interrupted the discussion to ask whether the Due d'Anjou, who was at one time one of her suitors, had been told what a pretty foot she had and how white and well rounded was her arm. This in the woman who flattered the armada with hard headed economy, who dared the superstitions terrors of her own conscience in her high handed and impudent treatment of the bishops, whose interest in the methods of torture for state prisoners was most mechanical and intelligent, entirely unhampered by any feminine hesitation as to blood or pain, is most curious.

In connection with this last characteristic of cruelty, vanity is not at all unexpected. Indeed, if one observes closely one will notice that excessively vain persons have almost always a strange inclination toward cruelty. The accounts of what Queen Elizabeth permitted and indeed commanded in this respect will hardly be regarded by us sensitive folk today—Margaret Deland in Harper's Bazar.

Slavery Protected the Negro.

If the negro had been forced to compete for existence in America, he would have been crushed out by the civilized power, as the Indian has been, says Albert Phelps in The Atlantic, but the peculiar institution of slavery protected him not only from this competition, but also, by artificial means, from those great forces of nature which inevitably weed out the weaker organisms and which operate most unrelentingly upon the ignorant savage. For the first time, perhaps, in the history of the world human beings had been treated as regulated like valuable stock, with as much care as is put upon the best horses and cattle. As a natural consequence the sanitary condition of the negro during slavery was remarkable, especially by contrast with his present condition, and his growth was the abnormal growth of a plant abnormally raised in a hothouse. When, therefore, this mass of helpless beings was thrown upon its own resources by the act of emancipation and when the protection of slavery had been withdrawn, the first wretchedness and suffering followed.

A Brief Interview.

The late Rev. H. S. Storer was a very hard man to interview, for he resented the inquisitiveness of the press and was loath to its agents. One evening a reporter attended a reception at his house and in the course of the evening touched his arm and whispered: "Doctor, I'm from the—". I want the names of guests and all the particulars.

"Yes," Dr. Storer whispered in return, "this way, this way." And, taking the young man's arm, he escorted him to the front door and put him out.

A DAGUERRETYPE

I was happy, oh, so happy, and I hummed a gay little tune as I looked myself with my usual Saturday-morning task of darning the stockings for the family. Now as a usual thing I do not darning, but this morning I went about it happily, for it was my eighteenth birthday and it was to be a never forgotten one.

Why, do you ask? Because at dinner I was to receive my great-grandmother's old daguerreotype. What is so wonderful about that? Just wait until you have heard my story, and you will know.

My great-grandmother had been the wife of a general in the Revolutionary war, and because she desired to enter into her husband's life she became a nurse. When an operation was being performed, she stood by and held the sufferer's hand, and because of her bravery won for herself the title of "The Soldier's Friend." Her bright face and sunny smile was always welcomed at the bedside of every soldier, while she worked swiftly, silently and skillfully, saving many and many a life.

When the war was over, the soldiers decided to give their "friend" some token of their deep gratitude, as they knew they could never thank her with words. So they asked her for a late picture of herself, and she gave them this old daguerreotype. And on her eighteenth birthday, as it chanced to be, they presented her with this same picture in a case of gold and hung on a heavy gold chain.

My grandmother wore this around her neck until her death, and on her deathbed she put it into the hands of her eldest daughter, saying: "Put this carefully away, Mary, and when your sister Lucy is 18 years of age put it around her neck, with her mother's blessing, and tell her to wear it until her death, or should she have a daughter give it to her at the age of 18. I want my great-grandmother's picture to be around the neck of my youngest daughter and so on through the family to each receive it on her eighteenth birthday."

So that is why I was so happy on that day, for it was my time to wear the locket.

At dinner my mother put the long, handsome chain around my neck, and, lifting the locket, I was about to gaze upon the face of the girl when suddenly I gave a gasp of surprise. My mother had told me that the locket was set round with diamonds. Truly it was a handsome thing.

Then I let my eyes travel from the diamond to the beautiful oval face of my great-grandmother.

The hair curled softly above the low, white forehead, and beneath it looked forth a pair of clear blue eyes. Then came the small, straight nose and the rosy mouth, around which played one of her rare sunny smiles. What a beauty she must have been!

Gazing into my mother's face, I saw that she was struggling hard to keep back the tears.

"Dear mother," I cried, "you wear it awfully long. Surely that is the best." But she pushed me gently from her and answered: "Dear, only take good care of it and remember that I was very fond of it, more so because my mother looked so much like it." "Twenty-five years had passed since the day I received the beautiful old daguerreotype, and now the time had come for me to part with it. But, oh, how times can change in 25 years!"

At noon Margaret came in, tired and cross, though she should have been happy on her birthday. She had not been darning stockings, but had been making cells.

Very few girls of this age and day have to darn stockings. I do not think that Margaret's white fingers, loaded with jewels, ever held a needle. When I put the chain around her neck and my eyes fastened upon the diamonds, she gave a low laugh and cried, "Oh, won't Alice Daze envy me these?" Then she looked up and saw the tears in my eyes. "Pshaw, mamma," she cried, "you surely are not so foolish as to cry over this. An old woman like you are too." Then she added as she carefully dropped the locket: "By the way, I believe I promised to go to grandmamma's with you today. Well, promises are like pie crust—easily broken. I shall be able to go."

Yes, times have greatly changed. For instance, my great-grandmother was called mamma, my grandmother was my mother and myself mamma. But, after all, I'm greatly blessed, for I have my dear old mother to go to, and I want to her that very day and poured into her sympathizing ears my sorrow over Margaret's coldness and my sorrow over having to part with my great-grandmother's daguerreotype. Sunny South.

He Sat Down.

A Scottish divine was noted for his pointed and cutting sayings both in and out of the pulpit. One Sunday morning, just as he was about to begin the service, he looked down and observed he was walking a sprightly young plowman in a brand new pair of light corded trousers.

The young man was in no hurry to get to his seat, and when he did get there he stood up deliberately and slowly arranged his trousers before sitting down. The minister had eyed him from the first and as the young man was turning round to see if there was any dust on the seat observed in an impatient voice:

"To an old man, my man, we've seen yer breeks."

The SPORTING WORLD

Plans of E. J. Geers.

Now that the grand circuit has opened, light harness horsemen everywhere have started in to make the season of 1901 a record breaker. Traps are unusually good this year, stakes are high and have been well filled with entries, and meet promoters are very enthusiastic.

The champion trotters and pacers have a lively campaign ahead. The Abbot, 2:03 1/4, champion trotter of the world; Crescenzo, 2:04 1/4, world's greatest trotting stallion; Borland, 2:08, owned by Thomas V. Lawson, the $250,000 pink millionaire sportsman of Boston, and Charley Herr, 2:07, the Kentucky crackerjack, are entered in tests of speed. Their performances will arouse widespread interest.

Ed Geers, America's ablest reinsman, has rounded the Abbot into great form. The champion is prophesied by many to be in condition to chop another second from the present mark. Crescenzo is doing the best trial work of his career. George H. Ketchum, the former driver, who owns the stallion, says Crescenzo will probably cut his record down to 2:03.

Yacht Racing Limit.

Many critics with claims to knowledge on the subject say that the limit has been reached in cup defense. This prediction is supposed to apply to not only hull, spars and gear, but to the cost of construction and equipment as well. The least expensive end of a racer built for the defense of the home America's cup is the structural steel.

It is the "clothes that dress the lady" that make a cup syndicate dive deep and earnestly in its pocket. With sails more costly than the trousseau of an heiress, and the cost of rigging that has no equal for expense in the world and spars that take the united energies of the most expert help months to prepare it is small wonder to the minds of those who are acquainted with the cost of the launching of past defenders that all are anxious for a halt and desire smaller boats and as a sequence smaller cost.

It is found to come, all agree. The Hesperides and the English and Scotch designers have reached a point in their rivalry and pushing off of weight that will permit of no further indiscretions in that direction, and while wooden spars will never again take the place of the made up mast, boom and gaff of steel there is sure to be a reaction to more staid and thoroughness in these metal spars.

Drilling the Brooklyn.

The Brooklyn club owes much of its success, in the opinion of people who know its methods, to the careful and constant training every player gets in batting and at his position.

Every morning the team is out for some hours of practice. If there has been a fall down on the previous day in a game, the play is repeated several times, so that the error and how to prevent it becomes fixed in the minds of the players. As to batting, Captain Kelly watches the men closely, and, for instance, he sees that one of the men cannot hit high balls, nothing but high balls are pitched to him until he learns how to land on them. The elementary faults of a batter, such as pulling the ball, are easily cured, but a good batter is born, not made. You can take a fair batter and improve him, but you cannot make a poor batter and make him a good one.

In the field special plays are practiced, doubles and the like. In fact, the morning school for the team is a constant drilling in what they should know in order to be able to think quickly and intelligently and play their positions for all that is in them.

DEALING IN FARM LANDS

Lively Sales in the Northwest—ern Country.

SELLERS AND BUYERS AROUND.

FACTS ABOUT THE MOVEMENT OF FARMERS FROM CULTIVATED TO WILDER REGIONS—AVAILABLE CHEAP LANDS MAY BE DIVIDED INTO THREE CLASSES. Many Settlers Expected This Year.

An interesting population movement is now at its height in the northwestern states, writes the New York Post's correspondent at Minneapolis under the date of July 15. Owners of high priced farm lands in the older of these states are selling out to richer or more contented neighbors and are moving west and northwest, where they buy cheap lands from proprietors who are desirous of selling and putting the proceeds into still cheaper lands still farther west and north. A farmer in Illinois or Iowa will sell his land at from $50 to $100 an acre and, moving into southern Minnesota, buy a new farm at from $20 to $30 an acre. The land of his new farm will be as rich as that of the old one, it is just as advantageously situated as regards the markets and will yield as good an income, yet the moving farmer may have made a net gain of thousands of dollars by the change. In the meantime the man he has bought out in southern Minnesota moves on into the forest regions of the northern part of the state or into the new farming lands that are being opened in the Red River valley and North Dakota, paying from $2 to $10 for land which is often very rich.

In consequence of this movement of population and the great speculative interest which has been aroused in northwestern lands in the last few years dealing in farm lands has grown into a business of large proportions. On railroad trains headed toward the region of cheap land may be seen farmers and speculators, and the little towns where they take trains to drive into the country are full of sellers and buyers.

The available cheap lands may be divided into three classes—railroad lands, cutover timber lands and homesteads. The railroad lands were those originally granted by the state or federal government to railroad companies. These lands have been regularly sold by the railroads for many years, but the policy of the Northern Pacific since its reorganization—that of disposing of the lands as rapidly as possible with a view to encouraging the promotion of its tributary territory—has given the process a great impetus within the last three years. The company has sold its lands in North Dakota and Minnesota in a few large tracts of hundreds of thousands of acres each at very low prices, sometimes not more than 75 cents an acre, and rarely more than $2. The companies or firms purchasing these lands have generally placed them on the market at double what was paid to the railroad company. These purchases in turn have been sold at the price and sold to individual settlers or to colonies made up of farmers from the more settled regions. In the end few of the lands actually taken for cultivation will have more than a second-hand price to the farmer and the usual holding is a quarter section.

The cutover lands, found in southern Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, are those which originally were covered with pine forests. Sometimes these lands are barren, sometimes they are sandy and suited only to particular crops, but often they are as rich as any in the state, well watered, good grass groves and ideal for general farming or dairy purposes. But as they are held by the lumber companies, which have no further use for them after the timber is removed, they are sold very cheaply. In fact, the lumber men often fail to attempt to pay the taxes. There is to be a general forfeit sale of such lands in Minnesota this fall.

There still remains in the remoter parts of the forest region of northern Minnesota much government land which may be taken up under the homestead laws. Last year the desire for cheap lands brought 150,000 people into the northwestern states. New settlers have been coming in by special trains this year, and railroad officials estimate that 200,000 thrifty, hard-working farmers will be added to the population there this year.

The Striped Watermelon.

How dear to my heart is the big watermelon. That I carry out home from the city at night. We'll carry it miles up the road in the country. I get there at bedtime and leave at daylight. The woman comes round when he happens to want to.

And it gives me a thirst just to think of the

We'll have when I get there and open my melon. Which weighs forty pounds, I will bet, at the least.

The big watermelon, the cool, juicy melon. I'll bet it's as big as a beer keg, at least.

The man that I bought it from fixed up a handle. Whereby I might carry my melon with ease. But the rope broke before I got down to the station.

And I all in the car with the thing on my back. I'll have to walk nearly a mile through the country.

But, oh, what a joy will be mine when I see my wife and my little ones bury their faces deep down in the melon lugged out there by me.

The damp, luscious melon, the striped watermelon. That's as big as a calf, it almost seems to me!

Brough!—In the distance I see the green gable: I hear my dear little ones shouting at play. Run, children! tell mamma to clear off the table! We'll open the thing and begin right away! How dear to my heart is the food of reflection.

Of sweet, juicy melons I've eaten before. But this, I confess, it is given to me in midlife. And there's only a wet bunch of dith at the core.

The very, green melon, the dashed and blanketed melon. The melon that's hard from the rind to the core.

Question Answered.

Yes August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. You can see mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendixitis. Nervous Prostration or Heart failure. Oh, they used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull with headaches and other such ailments. You only need a few doses of August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied that there is nothing else in the matter with you. See Green's Prize Almanac.—W. T. Brooks.

A STATEMENT in a local paper to the effect that members of the police force stood by and laughed at the rowdiness of some of the youngsters who were disturbing the religious worship in the tent near the depot, is indignantly denied by every member of the force. THE News interviewed each member of the force and they declare it to be without foundation. There has been no member of the force delegated to spend his entire time there, but they have been making occasional visits there while patrolling their beats, and they claim that no disorder existed while they were there.

WHILE the painters working for C. A. Daugherty were returning home from the country Saturday evening, they discovered a negro man lying by the roadside unconscious. He had been bringing a load of wheat belonging to Mr. Gano Hildreth to town, and was overcome by the heat and fell from the wagon. The gentlemen brought some water from the nearby creek and after bringing him around telephoned to town and a vehicle came after him. He will recover.

CANE LEWIS, white, and Jim Stont, colored got drunk together Sunday. They both went to sleep on the street with Lewis' head peacefully resting on Stont's shoulder. Stont woke up first and being afraid some one would steal his companion's watch proceeded to appropriate it himself. He failed to notice that three old sleuths in the persons of Hopsa Lowry, Jim Wilson and Ollie Carter were hot on his trail, and when he was arrested by Chief of Police Hill he denied having the watch and was dumfounded when it was found in his hip pocket. Judge Webb was kind enough to hold him over to the November term of Circuit Court in the sum of $130.

EVERYONE except a few horn growers are pleased with the early closing movement on the part of our local merchants. No one except those who are directly interested can appreciate the hardship of compelling the clerks to remain on duty these oppressively hot days from six o'clock in the morning until late at night. The merchants themselves are pleased with it as long as they all close. The majority of them have pleasant homes to go to, and they appreciate the privilege of not having to come down town after supper. It is generally conceded that the early closing movement will be a permanent thing here in Paris as it is in several other small towns where it has been in operation all the year round for several years.

Stabbing Affray.

On Sunday night, about 9 o'clock, at the holiness meeting which is being conducted in a tent near the depot, Joseph Embury and Virgil Cummins, two lads about 17 years of age, became involved in an altercation. Embury stabbed Cummins four times. The principal wound was in the left side near the heart. It was about a half inch wide and penetrated to the ribs. There was also two severe cuts on the left arm and a slight scratch on the back of the neck. The wounded boy was taken to the office of Dr. Wallingford, who took two stitches in the wound in the side and one each in those on the arm. He bled profusely and is suffering mostly from weakness caused by the loss of blood, with slight chance of blood poisoning. Embury was arranged before Judge Webb yesterday morning, but on account of Cummins being too weak to appear his examining trial was postponed until August 10. He was released on $200 bond.

It is claimed by several eye witnesses of the affair that Cummins was the aggressor and that Embury acted entirely in self defense.

In Judge Smith's Court.

In Judge Smith's Court Friday, Jim Fields was held in the sum of $100 to keep the peace. It seems that James had threatened the life of a Clayville lady, and she took this means to be enabled to sleep peacefully for the next six months.

Sarah Johnson used language of such a high degree of temperature on Thursday that the thermometer in Clayville showed 120 in the shade. The Judge was amazed of her and she paid $15 for her indiscretion. Her mother, Annie Fields also spoke in an unduly like manner and she also forked over $15.

Monday morning Noah Henderson of Clintonville, was tried on a charge of killing a calf belonging to Lou Brown, which had trespassed on his property. After Tom Moore had tried to prove the calf died from fatty degeneration of the heart superinduced by tuberculosis in its mother's milk, and Denis Dundon tried to show that the calf's skull was fractured, they both waived jurisdiction of the court and allowed the Judge to say how the calf died, which he was unable to do and the prisoner was discharged.

Dean Lee is one of the most gifted and interesting speakers in the pulpit to-day. As an exchange says:

"He speaks from the heart and his power is inspired of God. He does not preach theology, but Christ and holding up the Cross of a personal Savior he tries to make men feel the need of salvation."

His memorial service next December will be looked forward to with much interest by the antlered brethren of Paris.

A NEW COAL YARD.—J. S. Wilson & Bro., the enterprising implement and seed men, have opened a coal yard on Second street, with office on Bank Row.

If any one is thinking of investing in real estate there is no place that will give as good results as Texas, with mild climate, good schools and a low rate of taxes.

Kentuckian Promoted.

A dispatch in the last night's papers from Manila, says that Major Henry Allen, of the 43d Volunteers, who has been acting Civil Governor of the Island of Leyte, has been appointed Chief of the Insular Constabulary. Mr. Allen is a brother of Mr. W. B. Allen, of the Safe Deposit and Trust Company of this city, and Mr. J. G. Allen, cashier of the Millersburg bank.

Pistic Carnival At Lexington.

The Navarre Athletic Club, of Lexington, is arranging for a grand carnival of sport there during the trotting meetings and several interesting boxing contests are promised. Negotiations are pending to secure Marvin Hart and Kid McCoy as a star attraction and "Kid" Huber, of Louisville, and Gus Gordon may also be matched.

Peter Peter, Pumpkin Eater.

Peter Peter, Pumpkin Eater
Had a wife and could not keep her,
He put her in a feather bed,
And before she died she sadly said:
"Woe is me! Woe is me!
Peter you will do more for your second wife
Than you ever did for me."
Then when it came P-t-e-r's time to die
His second wife heard this mournful cry:
"Woe is me! Woe is me!
I'll say to you what my first wife said to me.
You will do more for the second I one
Than you ever did for me."
When the second wife's second husband
Heard her last words: "Woe is me!
Woe is me!"
He immediately consulted J. B. Mc-C and had the furniture of all three upholstered to please his intended twolst.
Don't you see.

Free From Dust.

The prettiest scenery this season of the year is that along the line of the popular "Henderson Route." Almost the entire distance from Louisville to Henderson you are in full view of the Ohio river. In addition to this the elegant ballast of the road makes it desirable to the travelers, as it is almost free from dust.

A Narrow Escape.

Last night while several young men were up the creek bathing, Duncan Taylor, who was unable to swim, and had hold of the side of the boat, lost his hold and sank. He had went down the second time when Ben Downey went to his assistance. Taylor grabbed Ben and the two were in danger of drowning when Bob Tucker and John James pulled them out. Mr. Taylor was more scared than hurt and swears in the future he will stick to the bath tub, and a very shallow one at that.

Card From Mr. Connelly.

I still solicit the patronage of the people of Paris and Bourbon county.

THE FAIR.

News from the great corn belt of the Southwest indicates that the forty days' drought has at last been broken. Copious showers have fallen in nearly all portions of the stricken section, and more rain is predicted. The late crops will receive the greatest benefit. With the break in the drought has come a general drop in temperature and a consequent decrease in the number of deaths and prostrations.

C. F. NAGEL, the well known fancy horse dealer and trainer, took ten first and one second premium at the Georgetown Elks' fair last week.

The heat of yesterday was fully up to the standard of the past two weeks. At 8 o'clock, however, a light shower served to reduce the temperature a few degrees.

Stock And Crop.

At Georgetown Fair, Mr. Joseph M. Hall, of this city, took the following premiums: Bull three years old and over, first premium; bull under one year, first premium; heifer one year and under, first premium; sweetstake bull, first premium; bull and three females, first premium.

A very important transfer of horse flesh was the sale on last Thursday of the fine trotting mare, Iva Dee, to Mr. Smathers, of New York, for $11,000. She was the property of Messrs. Sims Wilson, James McClinton and Douglas Thomas. Mr. Smathers also repays all the entrance fees that have been paid, which brings the price up to about $13,000.

The threshing season has closed. Leach Bros. threshed upwards of 14,000 bushels, and Hibler Bros. turned out over 17,000 bushels. Wheat was selling here yesterday at sixty cents.

Biggest bargains than ever at Heyman's hour sale, Thursday, August 8th.

OBITUARY.

An infant child of Jack Woods, of this city, died Sunday morning, aged three weeks.

John O'Neil, brother of W. B. and Henry O'Neil, of Paris, died last week at his home in Lebanon, Ky.

Mr. W. L. McClinton, who was operated upon for cancer of the bowel, at the hospital in Louisville last week, died in that institution at a quarter to nine o'clock Saturday night. His remains were brought to this city Sunday afternoon and the funeral services were conducted at the Episcopal Church yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock by the Rev. J. S. Meredith. The death of Mr. McClinton was a shock to a great many of his friends. While he had been a long and a patient sufferer with the disease which caused his death, he manfully bore up and continued to perform his duties as bookkeeper at the Agricultural Bank. For this reason very few knew that he was suffering with what is generally supposed to be an incurable disease. After the operation he rallied, and his family and friends believed that the worst was over and that he would recover. But when the reaction came he was not strong enough to undergo it and he passed away. Probably no young man in Paris had more friends than Will McClinton. His disposition was one which makes friends and forever retains them. He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Keith Spear, to whom the sympathy of the whole community is extended.

MONEY invested in the rice belt will pay better than any crop, as there is no such thing known as a failure of a rice crop.

Matrimonial.

SIMS—ALEXANDER.

A special from Lexington to the Cincinnati Enquirer of Saturday said: "The engagement of Miss Lucy Fullerton Alexander to Mr. William Sims is announced by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander J. Alexander, and at the famous 'Woodburn Farm.' Mr. Woodford consented, early in October there is to be a wedding that will rival any nuptials in the history of the State.

"Miss Alexander comes from the English nobility and is one of the most attractive of the young women of the Blue-grass county. Her father, in addition to holding the proprietorship of 'Woodburn Farm,' noted the world over as the home of many celebrated race horses and great herds of fine cattle, is the owner of a large estate in Scotland.

"Mr. Sims is a graduate of Yale and inherited from his illustrious father, the late Congressman Sims, many broad acres in beautiful Bourbon county. His home is at Paris."

You Do, or You Don't

Need Gasses :

The eye being a rather delicate organ, great care should be exercised in the selection of proper glasses. Many believe that glasses should be restored to only when the sight becomes so defective as not to be able to do without. This is a great mistake which must be combated. Whenever there is unmistakable evidence of the need of their aid, they should be used. A neglect of this rule sometimes produces mischief which results in serious trouble if the course be persisted in. Our Dr. C. H. POWEN having just returned from taking a special course in Optics from one of the best specialists in New York, is prepared to do the best of work, having the latest improved methods of fitting. Examinations free. Next visit Thursday, Aug. 8, 1901.
